

Details

The old saying that the devil is in the detail means that it is dangerous to ignore it. Another saying is don't get bogged down in the detail.

Your task is to write a story about a character who benefits or loses by studying the fine detail.

Use one of the pieces of stimulus as a starting point or source of ideas for your story. Limit your story to one event and one time frame. Give your story a title.

- Who is the character, where are they, what's happening?
- How can you build tension in each paragraph?
  - Can you describe new problems or new places?
  - How does the climax surprise or enlighten us?
- How can you resolve the character's situation/problem?

Forensic science: a revolution in crime detection.

DNA researchers are discovering the links between a person's physical characteristics and their genes. In the future, hair or body fluid left at a crime scene could reveal the perpetrator's height, nose size, skin colour, eye colour and other physical characteristics.

Claims about food on labels can be misleading when the fine detail is read.

Past climate changes, sea-level changes and catastrophes are written in stone.
